Dear Sir,

I would initially apologise for the obtuse nature of this enquiry but ask that you please bear with me.

Some time ago now I was fortunate enough to witness a sadly what is quite a rare sight, that being an accountant putting up a clear and reasoned case before a body of General Commissioners. So surprised was I that I wrote down the name of the firm on one of those new fangled electronic organisers but sadly in the section where (when it recently failed) the information was consigned to oblivion.

I did remember that the name of the firm was of the double barrelled variety and based an Barnes and I am therefore writing to enquire whether you in fact represented a client before the General Commissioners that met in Hammersmith Town Hall in the not too distant past. whereupon I would be very pleased to make your acquaintance and introduce some UK colleagues to you who are in need of solid representation on a continuing basis.

If I have got the wrong firm or person then my sincere apologies for troubling you.

Kind regards.

Yours faithfully,

David Thornton
